MR. EVARTS REMARKABLE SPEECH FOR THE DEVENCE. Mr. Tilton Accused of Attacking "Society, Morality, and Religion". Trying to Show that the Suit is Not of a Personal Nature.

The Great Defendant in a Happy Mood. Ex-Attorney-General William Maxwell Evarts is personally liked by those who meet him in the scandal court room, and he is always ordially greeted twere; but yesterday morning bled to hear him begin his share of the forensic plea for Mr. Beecher, was an added feature of his reception. Mr. Evarts is fifty-seven years old, looks older, and is so thin that his height beems greater than five feet ten, which is really out his stature. He looks more like the conventional conception of the lawyer than any but correct to say that he is hatchet-faced. It is less boufely but equally correct to say that his profile is remarkably like the one of Julius Casar often reproduced from original has relief, and that he surkingly resembles Mr. Ralph Waldo Emerson. He wears unfashionable clothes, and a high stock with a collar just turnng down over the top of it, which is enough to make a much commoner kind of man look like the portraits painted in a former and stiffer eriod of art and dress.

Mr. Jeffrey, the jurer whose illness made the early adjournment necessary on Wednesday, was again in his place and feeling well enough stay. Mr. Beecher, still aglow with health and -milingly loquacious, was accompanied by bis wife and several of the other oft-enumeratted members of his family. Mr. Tilton was un-attended by relatives, but Mr. Moulton was at sted in a group, as they are usually, but extered about the crowded room. All of not going to Virginia to spend the summer, as has been erroneously reported. Ex-Minister John Jay and United States Judge Hugh L. Lord MR. EVARTS'S ORATORY.

"It is very desirable that we should have ner-et q let." Judge Nellson said, after the jury il had been called and all was ready for Mr. ers to begin, "to the end not only that the let ker may not be disturbed, but that the jury THE LISTENING.

PLEADING FOR BEECHER, that comes nearest to an establishment among sinic discussions, and these rash exactions and concell at last therety to exercise.

THE PROPLICATES DELIGHTED.

Now to take the point where the scandal as a scandal as a matter of curious in spection, as a matter of en tively brought under the pr tection as it has or woman that is most lovely, most pure through it all. BEECHER THE FOUNDATION OF SOCIETY.

And a man, who is through it all and is now the greatest preacher of the go.-pel or love, the greatest defender of the foundation of society, the greatest defender of the foundation of society, the greatest cheerer and confirmer of the charities and heatiles of the family relation; the readest advocate of gverything that is good, that is pure, and of good report has man that when you ransack his life by a cross-examination that entitled them to prove against him corruptions of any kind, from Indianapolis down, goes from the stand inquestioned by audacious cross-examiners, that did not heisitate to ask old. Oliver Johnson whether he did not pick up a strumpet in Canal street and take het to a bandy house in Mercer street. Now you buglo to see how when a man begins by self. Wor, hip, as Mr. Tition did, and which I shall show you is the source of all his woes, when he finds has revalent than the source of all his woes, when he finds not a creater than the source of all his woes, when he finds not a continuous and his speech that he go man a conduct which he finds that he common to the conduct and his speech that he can impose his laws of human action, his laws of human responsibility, his laws of human action, his laws of human responsibility his laws of the man did not have been allowed that looks out for men. There is no thing that keeps worker and jurly, character za ion of the quality of folly and of its extreme demonstration; "Ine foot saith in his heart, there is no God." There is no moral government of this world that looks out for men. There is no though that keeps virtue in wome it except interprisonment in haroms, and educate he propositions of this man's case just reduces for the mailors and the propositions of this man's case just reduces for the mailors and the propositions of this man's case just reduces for the mailors and the propositions of this man's case just reduces you must find that white faith it human n

WHAT A VERDICT FOR THATON WOULD DEMON-STRATE.

Sin: You certainly do not realize how much he Church will be damaged if Mr. Beecher goes down his calamity must be averted by detending and saving
